The nation anxiously watched the East Coast over the weekend as Hurricane Florence slammed into the Carolinas, prompting massive evacuations and rescues. The devastating storm came just a few days before the one-year anniversary of Hurricane Maria, which wreaked havoc on Puerto Rico in 2017. Turn to page 5 and visit metro.us to get the latest on Florence recovery, and pick up a Metro on Thursday for our Maria anniversary coverage.

METRO BOSTONSUPER TYPHOON
SLAMS INTO CHINA

IA super typhoon made landfall in China's Guangdong on Sunday, the country's most populous province, after wreaking havoc in Hong Kong and Macau and killing potentially more than 50 people in the Philippines. Packing winds of more than 125 mph at its peak, tropical cyclone Mangkhut is considered the strongest to hit the region this year. Its strength outstripped that of Hurricane Florence, which achieved maximum sustained winds of 90 mph when it roared into North Carolina in the United States on Friday. The eye of Mangkhut, the Thai name for Southeast Asia's mangosteen fruit, skirted 62 miles south of Hong Kong but the former British colony was still caught in the typhoon's swirling bands of rain and gale-force winds. Hong Kong raised its highest No. 10 typhoon signal mid-morning as ferocious winds uprooted trees and smashed windows in office and residential buildings, some of which swayed in the gusts, residents said.

KAVANAUGH ACCUSER
GOES PUBLIC: WAPOST

2A woman who had anonymously accused U.S. Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh of sexual misconduct in the early 1980s decided to go public with her accusations and provided details of the alleged incident, the Washington Post reported on Sunday. In an interview with the newspaper, Christine Blasey Ford said that as a high school student in suburban Maryland just outside of Washington, a "stumbling drunk" Kavanaugh pinned her to a bed, groped her and attempted to remove her clothing. Last week, Kavanaugh said he "categorically and unequivocally" denies the allegations. The White House on Sunday did not immediately reply to a request for comment. A spokesman for Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley, responding to the latest developments in the Kavanaugh nomination, said, "It's disturbing that these uncorroborated allegations from more than 35 years ago, during high school, would surface on the eve of a committee vote."

2 FALL ILL IN RESTAURANT
IN UK POISON ATTACK CITY

4Two people fell ill on Sunday when eating in a restaurant in Salisbury, the English city where former Russian agent Sergei Skripal and his daughter Yulia were poisoned in March, police said. Police were called to the Prezzo restaurant in the evening in response to a "medical incident" involving a man and a woman, Wiltshire Police said in a statement. "As a precautionary measure, the restaurant and surrounding roads have been cordoned off while officers attend the scene and establish the circumstances surrounding what led them to become ill," it said. Britain has said Russian officers used the nerve agent Novichok to attack the Skripals. The Kremlin has denied any involvement. Police have said a nerve toxin had been left on the front door of the Skripals' home. They were found slumped in Salisbury city center after visiting Prezzo and another Italian restaurant, Zizzi. The former Russian spy and his daughter survived the murder attempt, but an unconnected woman, Dawn Sturgess, died in July and her partner Charlie Rowley fell ill after Rowley found a perfume bottle containing the same nerve agent.

SWISS STUDY ALLEGED CYBERATTACK ON WADA

5Swiss prosecutors are investigating whether Russian agents tried to hack the World Anti-Doping Agency, the Office of the Attorney General said on Saturday, broadening the scope of alleged espionage against institutions in Switzerland. Criminal proceedings were launched in March 2017 on suspicion of political espionage, the OAG said in a statement. "As part of these proceedings the OAG, in cooperation with the Federal Intelligence Service, was able to identify two individuals," it said. "The aforementioned criminal proceedings ... refer to criminal proceedings being conducted by the OAG due to a cyber-attack against the World Anti-Doping Agency," it added. The OAG said the individuals concerned were the same pair identified by the Swiss intelligence service which on Friday said it had foiled a Russian plot targeting a Swiss laboratory used to test nerve agents such as Novichok. The OAG said it would give no further information on the case, which it has not revealed until now. Swiss media on Saturday said the WADA offices and International Olympic Committee in Lausanne had both been targeted.

Residents cleared to return to areas hit by gas explosions

Fire Marshal reps said the explosions did not appear to be intentional.

Officials ordered 8,000 homes and businesses to evacuate and shut off electricity to prevent further fires.

Residents of three communities were allowed to return to their homes on Sunday for the first time since a series of gas explosions killed one man and set dozens of buildings on fire.

Natural gas leaks, believed to have been caused by over-pressurized lines, on Thursday triggered a series of explosions and fires in Andover, North Andover and Lawrence, communities northwest of Boston. Local officials ordered residents of some 8,000 homes and businesses to evacuate and shut off electricity to prevent further fires.

It was the largest natural gas pipeline accident, in terms of the number of buildings involved, in the United States since 2010, when an interstate line operated by Pacific Gas and Electric Co. ruptured in San Bruno, Calif., destroying 38 buildings, damaging 70 more and killing eight people.

Columbia Gas of Massachusetts, which provides service in the affected communities, declined to comment on Sunday on what caused the leaks, saying federal investigators would decide. The company had said before the releases that it would be upgrading gas lines in neighborhoods across the state, including the affected suburbs.

Columbia Gas' parent, NiSource Inc., has set up a phone center and an office in Lawrence to accept residents' claims for property damage and costs related to the fires and evacuation, NiSource spokesman Ken Stammen said in an email.

The National Transportation Safety Board, Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration, Massachusetts Fire Marshal's office, and Federal Bureau of Investigation are investigating the gas leaks and explosions.

"There is no sign that anyone did anything intentional," Jennifer Mieth, a spokeswoman for the state Fire Marshal said on Friday. She said the FBI would stay involved until the NTSB, which is leading the probe, determined what caused the leaks.

Florence delivers more drenching rains in eastern US

Florence drenched North Carolina with yet more rain on Sunday and officials warned residents that "the worst is yet to come" from a storm that has killed at least 14 people, as rivers inland were likely to flood.

Florence, which crashed into the state as a hurricane on Friday, had weakened to a tropical depression by Sunday morning but was forecast to drop another 5 to 10 inches of rain in North Carolina, bringing rainfall totals in some inland areas to 15 to 20 inches and even more in some places, according to the National Hurricane Center.

The most rain so far from Florence was 33.9 inches in Swansboro, N.C., a new record for a single hurricane in the state. The previous record was 24 inches, set by Hurricane Floyd, which killed 56 people in 1999, said Bryce Link, a meteorologist with private forecasting service DTN Marine Weather.

In North Carolina, more than 900 people were rescued from rising floodwaters and 15,000 remained in shelters, North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper told a news conference on Sunday.

Remained in shelters.

At least 10 people have died so far in the storm in North Carolina, including a mother and child killed by a falling tree, state officials said. Four people died in South Carolina, including a woman whose car hit a fallen tree.

In Fayetteville, a North Carolina city of about 210,000 people some 90 miles inland, authorities told thousands of residents near the Cape Fear River and Little River to get out of their homes by Sunday afternoon because of the flood risk.

"The worst is yet to come."

Mayor Mitch Colvin

"If you are refusing to leave during this mandatory evacuation, you need to do things like notify your legal next of kin because the loss of life is very, very possible," Mayor Mitch Colvin said at a news conference on Saturday.

"The worst is yet to come," he added.

In Leland, a low-lying city north of Wilmington, homes and local businesses were engulfed by water on Sunday.

Gas stations were abandoned, with many pumps keeled over, and trees cluttered many roads, making them impassable. The whir of generators could be heard throughout the city, a sound not expected to dim soon as crews work to restore power.

About 756,000 homes and businesses were without power on Sunday in North and South Carolina and surrounding states, down from a peak of nearly 1 million.

Five people were arrested for breaking into a Dollar General Store, said the police department in Wilmington, which has imposed a nighttime curfew.

"This is still a catastrophic, life-threatening storm," said Zack Taylor, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service's Weather Prediction Center.

"It has already dumped 20 to 30 inches of rain on parts of the Carolinas, with more to come," he said. REUTERS

Revere man killed in shark attack at a Wellfleet beach

The 26-year-old was attacked at Newcomb Hollow Beach on Saturday.

A Revere man was killed on Saturday after being attacked by a shark at Newcomb Hollow Beach.

Arthur Medici, 26, was boogie-boarding with friends roughly 30 yards offshore when he was bitten around 12:30 p.m.

"Around noontime [Saturday] a male swimmer at Newcomb Hollow Beach was bitten by what is believed to be a shark. The male victim [in his mid-20s] was pulled from the water, [and rescuers] provided emergency first aid to include CPR. The male victim was transported to Cape Cod Hospital by the Wellfleet Fire Department, where he passed from the injuries," Cape Cod National Seashore said in a statement.

Joe Booth, a local fisherman and surfer, witnessed the attack, telling Boston.com that he saw Medici and his friends in the water when Medici began kicking something behind him. After his friends dragged him to shore it became apparent that the man was bitten by a shark.

"I was that guy on the beach screaming, 'Shark, shark!'" Booth said. "It was like right out of that movie 'Jaws.' This has turned into Amity Island real quick out here."

According to Booth, several beachgoers attempted to make a tourniquet while others called 911.

This is the second shark attack on Cape Cod this summer. On Aug. 15 a New York man was attacked at Long Nook Beach in Truro. He suffered severe injuries.

Why you should do an MBA, and how much it will cost you

An MBA degree (Master of Business Administration) could be the missing link in your career development, the thing to propel you from your current position into the C-suite. Here's why you should start researching business schools and writing applications.

Business schools offer exposure to both amazing ideas and people One look at an MBA syllabus will show you how much there is to learn. However, the degree isn't merely an opportunity to expand your business knowledge. You'll get to expand your network, too. The people alongside you in the classroom will be similarly bright, driven individuals who could become vital connections later in your career.

Many full-time MBA programs also provide the opportunity of an internship during your MBA, which could lead to full-time job offers.

An MBA will lead to immediate financial returns

One of the most discussed aspects of an MBA is the return on investment (ROI) it can have, based on how it affects your future earnings. Recent QS research found that full-time MBA graduates across the U.S. and Canada achieved an average salary uplift of 74 percent thanks to their new degree. That's not to be sniffed at.

A decade after graduation, MBAs from schools across the U.S. and Canada were estimated to be an average of $419,161 better off financially. So, the only question is whether you can afford the initial investment. After all, MBAs aren't free.

How to pay for your MBA

The cost of an MBA degree can vary, but the average tuition for a two-year MBA program exceeds $60,000. If you attend one of the top business schools, you can expect to pay as much as $100,000 or more in tuition and fees.

The costs don't end there, either. You will probably need to take the GMAT (or GRE) exam, which measures higher-order reasoning skills and costs $250 globally. Application fees also need to be factored in. These are one of the highest sources of revenue for business schools; applicants can expect to pay anything from $100 to $275 per application to each business school.

The price tag may seem daunting, but help is available. Financial assistance comes in many shapes and sizes, but one of the most common forms are sponsorships. These are usually paid for by your employer. Scholarships and grants are also available via the school. It's worth noting that more than half of MBA students receive financial help.

Want to learn more about the MBA options available to you? The QS World MBA Tour is a fantastic way to meet representatives from the world's top business schools and have all your questions answered. Raphael Bob-Waksberg ponders life for 'BoJack Horseman' after its fifth season

The creator of the acclaimed Netflix animated series talks about the new season, and whether a sixth is on the way.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

Among the countless original programs that Netflix has produced in the past five years, Raphael Bob-Waksberg's animated dramedy "BoJack Horseman" reigns (and reins) supreme.

This largely due to the lengths that Bob-Waksberg and his writer's room will go to craft such heartfelt stories about heavy subjects that are set in a cartoon world where people coexist with talking animals.

Bob-Waksberg spoke to Metro about this, as well as whether or not he wants to keep making the show and whether or not Netflix wants him to.

How do you and everyone else in the writer's room approach the show's bigger themes?

It usually comes from the stories we've told so far and where they've left us, and asking ourselves, "Where do we go from here?" Every season starts from a certain place.

What is BoJack doing? Where has he been? Where is he going? We had suggested a certain trajectory of growth in the last four seasons, but it's not always in the correct direction. We've been inching toward a desire for redemption, for a kind of inner peace.

If we're really telling that story, or trying to be responsible with that story, and he's not there yet, then there are steps we need to take to help him get there. In other words, if we want to go lighter, then first we have to go darker. We're not out of the woods yet. It would be disingenuous to pretend that we were. There were more rock bottoms to hit before this character could really make the correct effort to start climbing out of the pit he had dug for himself.

Now that season five is coming out, what are your plans for the future? Will you keep doing "BoJack" as long as Netflix and its fans want more of it?

I'm always sure that every season is going to be the season that everyone turns on us, the season that we finally screw it up. Every year that doesn't happen, it only increases the pressure for the following year. Someday, I'll probably crack and walk away from the show because it's killing me, but maybe I'll wait until we get that eventual backlash. Though really, I'm going to keep making the show as long as I can.

BoJack Horseman season 5 is now streaming on Netflix

I won't say as long as Netflix allows me to, because I don't know where I'm going to be, or what I'm going to be going, in the future. But as long as I feel like the show has promise, and Netflix allows us to, it's a world that's still worth expanding. Our audience is still growing and I'm still excited by it. There might come a time when the show doesn't excite me anymore, but there are still lots of stories and relationships to explore. It hasn't gotten boring yet. There's a danger of it becoming boring for an audience, maybe before it becomes boring for me, but as long as they still enjoy it, and I still enjoy it, I'm going to keep making it.

There's always the idea of quitting while you're ahead.

Right, but again, there is still a lot of promise in "BoJack" for me. I'm still excited by it. If it ever got boring, I would walk away, especially if it felt like I was spinning my wheels. But it's a great setup, and I really love the people I work with. I don't know that I'm ever going to make a show like this again. This is my one opportunity to tell these kinds of stories and make these kinds of jokes. Plus, it's a very large canvas. We've shown that we can tell all sorts of stories with all kinds of characters from different parts of society, and I would like to continue expanding it.

But we'll see what happens. You could be talking to me in six months, and I'll say, "Nope, it's done. Goodbye!" I don't know. Though I do feel comfortable saying that I don't think the fifth season is the last. I hope there are more, but we'll see.

"BoJack Horseman" season five is now streaming on Netflix.

JOBS

A study shows how important the words "good job" are to most workers

patrick.king@metro.us

We would all like to think that we are good at what we do. But how important is hearing that you have done a good job from your employer? A little validation of your efforts can make it all worthwhile at the end of a long workweek.

What motivates you at work?

Recent research shows how important this can be for people who work remotely and in the office. The study — by Paul White, workplace-relationship psychologist, business consultant and author of "The 5 Languages of Appreciation in the Workplace" — surveyed 130,000 on-site and off-site employees around the country to see what motivated them the most when it came to their professional goals. The study found that employees who work from home tend to be more independently driven, with only 38% of those polled placing value on positive validation from an employer. On the other hand, 48% of employees who work in the office consider validation from an employer motivating.

While affirmation from the boss may be more important to commuters, the study also concluded that off-site long distance employees value the camaraderie and companionship of their co-workers to gain validation.

The study shows that while only 25% of on-site employees place importance on having quality time with their co-workers to talk about

Of employees who commute to an office day in and day out consider positive validation a motivation for doing well work, 35% of remote workers value this kind of bonding time as something they need to feel validated at work.

That is why most remote employees prefer to have meetings over video-conference call rather than over the phone so that they can put a face to the people they work with everyday.

These are some important statistics employers should take note of to maintain good working relationships with their employees — on-site or remote.

In fact, Upwork, the world's largest free-lancing website, found in its "Future of the Workplace" reports that nearly 63% of all companies in the U.S. now have remote workers. This is almost two-thirds of the country's workforce. So it is more important than ever for employers to understand how to connect with employees, no matter where they are.

"We know that people would like to feel valued and appreciated at work," explains Dr. White, "We have to self-motivate ourselves, but at some point it's nice to know that someone appreciates what you do."

"Unfortunately most people don't feel appreciated. Some research shows that 65% of the workforce say they haven't heard anything positive back about their work in the last 12 months. Another study showed that 79% of people who leave voluntarily or quit site that lack of appreciation was one of the main reasons why they leave."

Pats trampled by Jacksonville

The Patriots suffered their first loss of the season Sunday, losing 31-20.

MATT BURKE
letters@metro.us

The Patriots have made an art form out of the second-half comeback in recent years, but on Sunday in sizzling Jacksonville the Pats couldn't climb out of a giant early hole.

The Jaguars put up 21 points and the Pats' offense only mustered a field goal in the first half, paving the way to a 31-20 Jaguars win. The Patriots are now 1-1 on the season while Jacksonville moved to 2-0. The Pats will now face the Lions next Sunday night in Detroit.

Like in last season's AFC Championship game, Blake Bortles had his way with the New England defense. On Sunday, Bortles had 200 yards passing and three touchdowns by half-time. At the half, Tom Brady had just 107 yards passing. The Patriots' rushing offense couldn't get anything going early on either as it mustered just 34 yards on 14 carries as a team.

Jacksonville also did a terrific job taking Brady's top target out of the game as Rob Gronkowski was held to just two catches for 15 yards.

The only time the Patriots really looked like the Patriots in northeast Florida on Sunday was during the third quarter, when Stephon Gilmore punched the ball loose from DJ Chark. The Pats recovered the ball and immediately went on an impressive drive.

A rare 10-yard Brady rush, a Brady completion to Jacob Hollister on a bootleg, and two strong carries by rookie Sony Michel set up the first of two touchdown grabs by Chris Hogan.

Shortly after, Kyle Van Noy picked off Bortles when Austin Seferian-Jenkins bobbled the ball. The Pats had prime field position and were in good position to mount a serious comeback. But Jags defensive end Dante Fowler took it right back with a strip sack of Brady — and all New England momentum was lost.

Midway through the fourth, Dede Westbrook caught the ball over the middle, and proceeded to blow by the Patriots defense down the sideline. Westbrook took it 61 yards to the house, effectively ending the Patriots' chances of victory.
